

PROJECT ARCHAEOLOGY

Leadership Academy

Project Archaeology Leadership Academy
Montana State University
Bozeman, Montana
June 25 – 29, 2012

Interested in becoming a leader in cultural heritage education? Project Archaeology is offering a select few the opportunity to take the lead in helping to protect our cultural heritage. Social Studies and Science teachers are encouraged to apply for this unique opportunity which will teach them Project Archaeology’s acclaimed inquiry-based curriculum, Investigating Shelter. The curriculum guides students through a complete archaeological investigation of a shelter which incorporates history, science, math, and the arts while emphasizing the importance of our cultural heritage and how to protect it.

Academy participants, upon completion of the program, will be certified to teach all Project Archaeology curricula to their peers through workshops, institutes, and job-embedded mentoring. The program is free of charge to participants except for the cost of two required curriculum guides at $37. Two university credits are available to interested participants. Applications – due by April 1, 2012 – are available at www.projectarchaeology.org.

Project Archaeology Investigating Shelter has been endorsed by the National Council for the Social Studies. “NCSS is pleased to support a program that seeks to educate students on the cultures of the past and how they have endured to the present.”
Susan Griffin, Executive Director

Learn more about
Project Archaeology
at www.projectarchaeology.org.
Contact Kathy Francisco at 406 994 6727 or kfrancisco@montana.edu for more information.

Project Archaeology is a joint program of Montana State University and the Bureau of Land Management

2011 Recipient
Secretary of the Interior’s
Partners in Conservation
Award